Local area

Typical Andalusian countryside close to Antequera

The closest town is Alameda, only a short three-quarter mile walk from the park. Here can be found a good range of shops, bars and restaurants. The town is probably most famous for its celebrity 'El Tempranillo', the legendary 19th century bandit born in nearby Jauja and buried in Alameda's Iglesia de la Purísima Concepción church.

Alameda is only few miles from a protected lake, the Laguna de la Ratosa Natural Reserve, where you can see flamingos in spring and summer, along with other aquatic birds.

The main town to the south of La Posada is Antequera. Here can be found all the main shops, supermarkets and services.

Antequera is linked to the coast by a modern motorway and also by the main line railway, making easy work of excursions to Malaga or the renowned hotspots of Marbella and Puerto Banus.

Other towns and villages in the area include Fuente de Piedra, the closest village to the nature reserve of the same name that is famous for its flamingos; the town of Campillos, 25km west of Antequera between the Guadalhorce reservoirs and the Laguna de Fuente de Piedra; Mollina, a few miles from La Posada northwest of Antequera which is a major wine-producing town.
